Anyone know how the voting went? It shouldn't take too long to do a count.

Nothing yet..

And i need to make sure he got mine. They were out of town, I think, over the weekend so I sent mine by email.

According to my neighbor they were there on Friday. He said he stopped by to drop off his proxy and Marc was in the driveway so he just gave it to him. Said he didn't even look at it when he gave it to him and he was acting very sour. I don't know if that means anything or not.

Ahh. Your neighbor has not joined us on these forums, has he? Did he tell you how he voted?

No he's not part of the forum but I know he voted "negative" across the board.

It has been a while - any word on the vote count? Hopefully we aren't dealing with any chads....

I received this information this morning via email from Marc.
Patience... I'm getting to it... not enough votes to conclude anything.

Seems pretty simple to me. Votes have to be turned in by August 15, count the yes votes, count the no votes, post results.

Any action allowing a "mortgage" would require 100% of homeowners to cast votes, and 75% would need to vote in the affirmative.

I'm not sure this "ballot" was topically delineated well enough to be a true VOTE in any case.

The newsletter was emailed today but in a MS-Publisher doc... anyone care to post the vote counts, if they are listed? Since I don't use publisher, the electronic document is about worthless...

And 3mb in size too!

Yikes

so, I converted it to PDF. It's posted in the "waiting" article on the front page of the site.

Looks like the debate continues...
